

CONTACT:

Clara Vondrich

clara@fenton.com

SHOWTIME MAKES LANDMARK CLIMATE SERIES YEARS OF LIVING DANGEROUSLY FREE
FOR 74 MILLION HOMES AS PART OF BIG FREE PREVIEW
WEEKEND

In Wake of National Climate Assessment release, "The Non-Fiction Thriller You Won't Want to Miss"

May 9 - The producers of the climate TV series "Years of Living Dangerously" praised SHOWTIME® today for making the first 4 episodes available for free this weekend, starting Friday, to many non-SHOWTIME subscribers. As part of a Free Preview Weekend, SHOWTIME will be available to 74 million homes, reaching the network's 23 million subscribers and an additional 51 million households, for one weekend only.

The "here and now" impacts reported in this week's National Climate Assessment are featured in living color and drama on the series.

"The timing is surreal: the government released its climate report in the midst of our 9 week series," said YEARS Executive Producer David Gelber. "Then SHOWTIME makes it available for free, making a great contribution to the public discussion."

"YEARS gives us the visual highlights of the National Climate Assessment," said climate scientist and Texas Tech University Professor Katharine Hayhoe. "From droughts in the Southwest to coastal flooding on the east coast, art imitates life. Except this time, it's real."

The New York Times called YEARS "a compelling fresh approach to showing the importance of climate hazards to human affairs" and Time says it's "a strong work with richly shot and compelling stories." The Guardian called it "a nonfiction thriller you won't want to miss."

The free showing of the first 4 episodes of YEARS (and other SHOWTIME programs) will be available on demand through participating distributors, which include: AT&T U-Verse, CenturyLink Prism, Comcast, Cox Communications, Mediacom, RCN and Verizon FiOS. All of these will feature it through SHOWTIME ON DEMAND® and some will allow online viewing through the network's authenticated TV Everywhere service SHOWTIME ANYTIME®. You must be a digital subscriber to receive video on demand and HD. In addition, 80 percent of U.S. digital homes including subscribers to AT&T U-Verse, Cable ONE, Century Link, Cox Communications, DIRECTV, DISH, Mediacom, RCN, Verizon FiOS, along with additional distributors, will be able to watch the fourth episode for free this weekend on-air on SHOWTIME. Available platforms will vary by participating distributor. For additional details and a full schedule of programming, go to SHO.com/freepreview.